THE ICE-MAN

Thousands of years ago, there was ice across a lot of the world. When the ice melted and it became warmer, people’s lives changed. They began to move from place to place. They didn’t live in caves anymore. They lived in long houses. They built their houses with small trees and grass.

In those days, children didn’t go to school. They went into the fields and worked with the animals. They had cows, pigs, sheep, goats and dogs, but they didn’t have horses, cats or chickens. The women cooked meat and made cheese and butter from milk. They wore wool cloths and leather boots. They didn’t use farm machines, but the cows worked with the farmers in the fields.

People didn’t stay in one place. Many people went from village to village. They saw how other people lived. When strangers came to the village they had new ideas, sometimes they traded things- pots, crops and metal from others.
