1 ENDANGERED SPECIES

Nowadays there are only five species of rhinoceros in the world and all of them are in danger of extinction: three live in Asia and two live in Africa. The members of the African species are larger than their Asian cousins. Rhinos are large animals and can weigh between one and three tones. They feed on grass and leaves. Rhinos are very short sighted. They can be very aggressive and they can run up to 50 kilometers an hour. They have no natural enemies except for human beings.

Hunters do not kill rhinos for their meat or skins, but for their horns. In Yemen, the handles of the expensive traditional knives worn by men are made from rhinoceros horn. In the Far East, It is consider very strong medicine. In China, people use it for colds, headaches, and many other illnesses. As a result, rhinoceros horn is highly prized on the market, and poachers risk their lives to kill the few remaining rhinos.
